Some written publications should be copyrighted. To copyright your publication, place a notice on the copyright page. Either the word copyright and/or the © symbol must appear along with the year of publication, and the name of the owner (i.e.: Copyright © 2008 Bill Shakespeare All rights reserved.)

“All rights reserved” is usually defined. i.e., “Written permission must be secured from the owner to use or reproduce any part of this document. Photographs may not be reproduced in any way unless used with the publishers written permission.”

After the publishing/printing of your materials, you may register your copyright by sending the following items to the US Copyright Office: Form TX, two printed copies of your publication (one copy if it is not for sale) and a fee (usually $45).
